very, in the national past, to the Federal. Concerning the French reception of Ernst Jünger, see Bürger, 'Generation en guerre'.
387Ricardo Guillermo Juarros and Armand Denis to the heroes of the battle of Waterloo, and, in the first case, it seems also of an order of the Order of the Garter¹. Jünger, says another of his biographers, 'was "quiété avec la quasi-totalité des Français"'.². Ernst Jünger the author was born into a family of German aristocrats in 1890. Although his parents, Ernst Hans Albrecht Jünger and Marie Sophie Felicie Jünger, were not rich, his grandmother was the Countess von Cramm and his father owned land and property, and was an officer of the Imperial German Army.³ Because of his father's profession Ernst Jünger spent a considerable part of his childhood in Dresden and in 'Germany' (the German Empire), and between 1911 and 1914 he also went to the Royal School at St. Gothard, Switzerland, where he was an excellent scholar. According to some sources he was a boy of a 'solitary and unproductive nature' who spent his time reading Gibbon's Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire.⁴ He had in his possession the novel Aus dem Kreuzverhör des Todes by Baron Karl von Münsterberg, who was a German writer of the 'Freethinkers and Revolutionaries' period and was a member of the 'Young Nobles', an organisation of non-conformist intellectuals and their friends.^{1 5} Because of his mother's 'obsession with pure Germanness' and his desire to belong to the 'Great Germanic Race', he joined the 'Nobles of the Race' in 1912.⁶ From 1913 to 1914 he studied for a degree in law at the University of Heidelberg in Germany and from 1915 to 1917 he studied at the University of Strasbourg in France. In 1915 he also started working as a journalist in Strasbourg for the German press. After the First World War he worked as a war correspondent for the 'World Press Review'.^{1 7} From 1919 to 1923 he was a freelance writer, and from 1924 to 1935 a full-time lecturer and researcher in the Department of History of Literature at the University of Munich. Between 1929 and 1933 he held a professorial chair. 82157476af
