How could I get the absolute path of the element if I don't know the tag name? I'm trying to apply the same approach to set up a sort of router. Eg. I have a with a class of "route" and an onclick event which calls the router function: `router(this);`. I want to set up a function which automatically applies whatever function the "router" method returns when calling this on a span with the class="route". A: // assuming element name is "myelement" `document.getElementsByName("myelement").href`; 1.
